

Getting Your Job: the Covid-19 vaccine and people with intellectual disability

The Department of Health is doing a webinar about the Covid-19 vaccine for people with intellectual disability.

Inclusion Australia will support the Department with the webinar.

The webinar is for people with an intellectual disability and supporters.

The webinar is on Wednesday 1 September 2021.

It starts at 11 o'clock. It will last for one hour.

The webinar is a chat between:

- Tara Elliffe, a self-advocate from NSW
- Dr Nick Lennox who works for the Department of Health

Jamie Bannister from Inclusion Australia will also help with questions and other things.

Tara is a self-advocate from New South Wales. She has had a Covid job. She will talk about her experience and why getting the jab was important to her.

Nick is a medical doctor who has worked with many people with intellectual disability. He will tell us why he thinks people should get a jab and answer your questions.

You will be able to ask Tara and Nick questions about the COVID vaccine and people with an intellectual disability.

The webinar will be recorded so people can watch it afterwards.
